"This memorial to Dr. Barney Clark is a tribute to his medical generosity, courage and life," reads part of the inscription on a six-foot high monument dedicated in Provo Friday morning.

Nearly 75 relatives and friends of the Clark family attended the short unveiling ceremony in Memorial Park, 800 E. Center, on the first anniversary of the death of Clark, the world's first artificial heart recipient.

"His sacrifice is immeasurable in the advancement of medicine. For this, Dr. Clark takes his place among American heroes." The monument details some of his life and his contribution to science.

Clark was born and raised in Provo, attending schools just a few blocks from where the monument now stands. He received the artificial heart in 1982 but finally succumbed to numerous physical problems and died March 23, 1983.

Provo Mayor James Ferguson spoke before the unveiling, followed by Una Loy Clark, Clark's widow, speaking for a few moments.

Ferguson said the monument effort was an appropriate recognition "of one of our city's sons, Barney Clark, who in many ways represented a true pioneer spirit."

Carranza, a former Defense Minister who was named head of the Treasury Police last year, denied he worked for the CIA.

"My relations with members of the U.S. Embassy (in San Salvador) and especially with the military attaches have been on purely technical matters ... I do not know anybody who is a member of the CIA, and I have not received any money from the United States," Carranza said.

In Washington, Rep. James Shannon, D-Mass., filed a resolution asking the CIA to turn over documents about Carranza's reported links with the agency.

In a CBS interview Wednesday, an unidentified source with access to high Salvadoran government officials implicated Carranza in death squad activity and said he had been a CIA informant for five or six years.

The New York Times Thursday quoted U.S. officials as saying Carranza has received more than $90,000 a year as a CIA informant for the last five or six years.

accusation."

A U.S.-made C-123 air plane being used by the Electoral Committee to carry lot boxes to eastern El Salvador for Sunday's presidential election triggered three mines upon landing at the airport in El Orajuelo, 70 miles east of the capital.

"We touched down and all sudden, boom," said the pilot who declined to give his name. The pilot was uninjured in the crash, but two crew members were hurt, one seriously.

The plane's landing gear was blown out and it careened forward yards, ripping a large hole in the fuselage before coming to a stop, the pilot said.

A top guerrilla commander meanwhile, warned his forces "are not going to stop war" for the elections.

In an interview on the clarifcatorine Radio Venceremos, Joaquin Villalobos, a commander of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, said the guerrillas would carry out combat actions on election day.

"The elections are not politically important," said Villalobos.

U.S.-Backed Guerrillas Kill 16 Sandinistas

U.S.-financed guerrillas killed 16 Sandinista militiamen in an ambush in Nicaragua's northern mountains, where the insurgents and government forces are locked in heavy combat, a military official said.

Guillermo Martinez, a Nicaraguan militia official in San Rafael Norte, 72 miles north of Managua, said Thursday rebels of the U.S.-supported Nicaraguan Democratic Force Tuesday attacked government troops in the nearby town of El Plantel.

The rebels killed 16 civilian militiamen in the attack, he said, and Sandinista reinforcements sent to the town inflicted "quite a few deaths on the counter-revolutionaries."

The rebels, who are fighting to overthrow the Sandinista government, are trying to disrupt the economy and upcoming national elections with a campaign of attacks on key targets.

In the Nicaraguan capital of Managua, the Superior Council for Private Enterprise, known as COSEP, said presidential elections set for Nov. 4 may not be held because of a state of emergency and the country's dire economic conditions.
